

Kaitlin Walsh

Kaitlin Walsh, Ph.D. is an Instructional Designer and Program Coordinator for the Digital Media and Communication major at the University of Saint Joseph in CT. As Instructional Designer, she consults with faculty on the educational design, development and technology for distance and web-enhanced courses. She also develops and delivers faculty development programs on a variety of topics related to teaching and learning. As Program Coordinator for the Digital Media and Communication Major, she develops new courses and concentrations for the major and works with faculty to ensure students meet all program requirements. Kaitlin is also an adjunct instructor, teaching courses in communication, mass media, information literacy and Latino cultural studies. She holds a doctorate in Spanish literature from Oxford University, as well as master's degrees in European literature (Oxford) and advertising (University of Hartford). When she's not at work Kaitlin likes all things crafty, teaching herself SQL, flying her drone and watching vintage game shows.